

For the Polynesian.

TO ZANTIHHIPPE. Wherefore so bitter, gentle dame? "Tis true My "parting lines" were never meant for you, But for a lady. Yet since you complain At such neglect, I'll try my pen again, And breathe a word of counsel in your ear, (Although 'twill be but labor lost I fear.) Ere next to vent the spleen that fills your breast You make yourself a standing public jest, By perpetrating lines whose impudence Is only equalted by their want of sense; Go read old Esop, and you then will know That things like you were common long ago.

A certain donkey wandering in the field, Once found a flate which rightly touched could yield Sweet music, and (the counterpart of you.) Fancied that he was a musician too; But when he tried his powers, like you, alas! Proved he was only as at hirth, an ass, When next you feel the "itch of scribbling" burn, From your true prototype a lesson learn, Take warning by the donkey and his flute, And till your sense and temper mend, be mute; Remember truth should not be always told, Nor show yourself a fool as well as scold! Nov. 28th.
